PRESS RELEASE

Demirören Axpo and Groupama Turkey announced the first European produced, renewable electricity is consumed in Turkey.

ISTANBUL, August 14th, 2013 – Demirören-Axpo is pleased to announce that it has reached an important milestone in Turkey. The first renewable electricity, supplied from continental Europe, was consumed. The renewable electricity was transferred via the Guarantee of Origin (GoO) to Groupama Turkey.

Demirören-Axpo will supply renewable electricity for the entire electricity consumption (2000 MWh) of all Groupama Turkey facilities. Groupama Turkey will for the period from July 1st, 2013 to June 30th, 2014 consume only 100% renewable electricity.

“We are glad to announce that this deal represents a milestone on the Turkish electricity market. Now this deal was possible thanks to the wide pan-European presence of Axpo. We hope that with this deal, the Turkish electricity consumer will know that they can take full advantage of the possibility to buy renewable electricity from outside Turkey’s national border” said Salvatore Lima, Head Origination Turkey of Demirören-Axpo.

What is the Guarantee of Origin (GoO)?

The Guarantee of Origin is the EU-mandated instrument used to track electricity from its location of production to its location of consumption. The GoO is used by electricity end-users to prove the share and quantity of renewable electricity they have consumed. In short, Consumers, via the GoO system, have a choice in their specific electricity consumption.

The production, trade and sale of GoOs allows ‘in-demand’ electricity production sites (like renewables) to receive an additional value for their product, above the price of the physical electricity. GoOs standardized by the European Energy Certificate Standard (EECS) accounted for more than 215 TWh of electricity consumption in 2012.
